

fine arts

→ artists express creativity

This year at Southwest, the Fine Arts Department successfully bonded aspiring artists through their passion for the arts. Whether it was through music or artistic media, students perfected their expressive talents and shared it with all others on campus.

All throughout the year, musicians performed spectacular pieces of music for their adoring audiences, and fans attended countless presentations to be entertained by harmonizing melodies. Singers, dancers, and members of the band put on shows during Christmas time and in the spring. Music was not the only art form providing viewing pleasure to those on campus. The beginner basics were offered in classes such as Drawing I and II, Design, and Painting, and students enrolled in these courses to enhance their talents. For many young artists, this year meant producing astounding handiwork and performances that brought the people on Southwest's campus together to appreciate the fine arts.

by Madison VanNess

left: Jasmine Haynes and Anna Thomas harmonize as one; opposite page: Lauren Wroten sings from her heart; top left: Will Fauver amazes the audience with his voice; above: Haven Johnson shocks the crowd with her dance routine.